To Whom it May Concern:

I hired Hardy & Hardy Law to represent me in a Worker's Compensation claim in early 2008. I was injured on the job in the previous December, and worked for that company until they laid me off on January 31, 2008. At that time, I was almost destitute and feeling rather hopeless. I had no idea how I was going to survive because I was in a lot of pain from my injury and didn't think I could work full-time. I talked to Dean Hardy and his assistant, Robert, and they agreed to help me to pursue my claim and to get the insurance company to pay me disability benefits while I underwent treatment. I truly believe if it wasn't for Dean and Robert's intervention, I might have ended up literally on the street. This was just the beginning of the exceptional care and beyond-the-call-of-duty assistance that Hardy & Hardy Law has provided me during my three plus year ordeal so far.

Worker's compensation claims are especially difficult to deal with from a law professional's point of view because there are few penalties for the insurance company if they stall or refuse to pay claims. The work on behalf of a client is frustrating, and often not very profitable. It takes a special kind of law team to take these kinds of cases—they have to be patient, persistent, and really know the law. I found that everyone in the Hardy & Hardy office were incredibly professional and extremely knowledgeable in all aspects of worker's compensation law. They were called to task over and over again when the insurance company in my case balked, and they delivered the best possible results for me time and time again. To this day, even though Dean and his team aren't being compensated for their help, they continue to intervene on my behalf in getting the insurance company to reimburse me.

Every member of the Hardy & Hardy law firm is an incredible human being. The receptionist, Ilana, is always friendly and warm and gets my messages to Dean and Robert promptly. Robert is a diligent and persistent pit bull when it comes to these long, protracted arguments with the insurance company. And Dean is one of the most kind, compassionate and moral professionals I have ever encountered. Even though my case was small -- Hardy & Hardy wouldn't be compensated much because I didn't earn that much, and their percentage was based on my salary--they treated me like I was worth a million dollars. I never felt talked down to or that I wasn't valuable, rather just the opposite—that I mattered, my problems were important, and they were going to help me no matter what.

In closing, I wish that all professionals held themselves to such a high level of service as the team at Hardy & Hardy does. I believe that this level of care is rare, and that's why I'm taking the time to offer my wholehearted recommendation to anyone who is struggling with a worker's compensation claim, or any other legal matter, to hire the Hardy & Hardy law firm to represent them. I would be happy to give my personal endorsement via telephone and talk to anyone who wishes to contact me. I am indebted to Dean, Robert and Ilana and am forever grateful to them.

Sincerely,

Vickie Comrie
